| Notes to Chapter 27: Note 1. For the purposes of this Chapter, a chemical reaction confers the status of originating goods. “Chemical reaction” means a process (including biochemical processes) that produces a molecule with a new structure by breaking intramolecular bonds and forming new intramolecular bonds, or by changing the spatial arrangement of atoms in a molecule. The following do not constitute chemical reactions for the purposes of this definition (a) dissolution in water or other solvents; (b) the elimination of solvents, including water of solution; or (c) the addition or removal of water of crystallization. Note 2. For the heading 27.10 purposes, the following processes confer the status of originating goods (a) Atmospheric distillation - A separation process in which petroleum is converted in a distillation tower into fractions according to boiling point. Subsequently the vapors are condensed into different liquid fractions; liquefied petroleum gas, naphtha, gasoline, kerosene, diesel (heating oil), light gas oils, and lubricant bases are produced by atmospheric distillation of petroleum; (b) Vacuum distillation - Distillation at a pressure below atmospheric, but not so low as to be considered molecular distillation. Vacuum distillation is used to distill heat-sensitive products with high boiling points, such as heavy distillates contained in petroleum, from which light and heavy vacuum gas oils and residues are obtained. In some refineries, the gas oils can be further processed to obtain bases for lubricating oils; (c) Catalytic hydroprocessing - The cracking and/or treatment of petroleum derivatives with hydrogen at high temperatures and pressure, with the presence of special catalysts. Catalytic hydroprocessing includes hydrogen cracking and hydrotreating; |   |                              |

|------------|--|------------------------------|
|            | (d) Reforming (catalytic reforming) - Consists of the rearrangement of molecules in the boiling range of naphthas to form higher octane aromatics (e.g. improving anti-knock quality at the expense of gasoline yield). One of the main products is catalytic reforming, used as a blending component for gasoline. In this process, hydrogen is obtained as a by-product; (e) Alkylation - The process by which high-octane gasoline is obtained by catalytically combining an isoparaffin and an olefin; (f) Cracking - Refining process that involves the molecular decomposition and recombination of organic compounds by means of heat, which combine to form molecules more suitable to constitute motor fuels, monomers, etc.; (g) Coking - Thermal cracking process in which heavy residual hydrocarbons of low economic value, such as reduced crude, cracking residue, tar, and shale oil, are converted by high temperatures into carbon, also obtaining hydrocarbon fractions of lower boiling temperatures, which are prepared to be used as feedstock for other process units in the refineries, to be finally converted into products of higher added value; and (h) Isomerization - A petroleum refining process in which hydrocarbons with iso molecular structure are converted into their corresponding isomers. Note 3. In heading 27.10, "direct blending" means a refining process in which mixtures of petroleum from different processing units and components stored in tanks are combined to create a finished product, with predetermined parameters, classified in heading 27.10. |                              |
